In the office at 7:30am and trying to sign into Blackstream account in Outlook. It didn't recognize my login password and I tried to many times and it locked me out (standard stuff). When Stuart Owen, IT Admin came in, I asked him for a reset. He said he couldn't do it and that I had to go through Christine Brodsky, COO at Blackstream. I told him that she had sent me an email that I could no longer receive Blackstream email and that I responded that I understood but I wasn't trying to receive new emails, just have access to old email. While I was employed at BIRE, I was also employed at Contender but used my BIRE email (I didn't have a Contender email at that time). I just needed access to those communications and attachments. She sent an out of the office reply. I asked Stuart why he wouldn't just reset my password to get into my own account. He said he was told not to and that I had to go through Christine or Michael Mumma. I asked him again, who told you I can't have access to my email and he just shook his head and said he was caught in the middle.

I later took Stuart aside and apologized that I might have sounded forceful in this request and that I understood he was just following instructions. He again said this was due to all the drama that had played out with Michael Mumma over the past few months.
